This past fall was a fascinating time to be at the CBC as broadcasters work to adapt to changing media consumption habits. It also marked the start of the Hockey Night In Canada partnership with Rogers, a scandal breaking about one of CBC's most notable personalities, and Canadian news making international headlines. Having an interest in communications law, I was excited to get the opportunity to work for the public broadcaster during this period as part of Osgoode's Intellectual Property Law and Technology Intensive Program.

IP Intensive Program: A Semester at Teva Canada - An Insider's Look at the Pharmaceutical Industry

January 10, 2015 by Adam Falconi

This past fall I had the privilege of participating in Osgoode Hall Law School's Intellectual Property and Technology Law Intensive Program. The placement allowed me to spend my fall semester with the Legal Affairs department of Teva Canada, one of Canada's largest manufacturers of generic medications and a subsidiary of Teva Ltd., one of the top 10 pharmaceutical companies in the world. The program gave me the opportunity to work alongside legal counsel and gain valuable insight into in-house practice at a large pharmaceutical company. My placement centered on intellectual property law and focused heavily on drafting patent validity opinions and conducting research for both prospective and ongoing pharmaceutical patent litigation.

IP Intensive: Experiencing the Heart of the Legal Technology Boom at CodeX

January 13, 2015 by Peter Neufeld

This fall semester I had the honour of attending CodeX: The Stanford Center for Legal Informatics as part of Osgoode's Intellectual Property Law and Technology Intensive Program. CodeX's broad mission is to design technologies for a better legal system. Taking this mission in earnest I set out to develop Econo.Mine, a legal analytics platform meant to decipher a judge's understanding of econometrics used in antitrust litigation. My desire to create Econo.Mine was in response to the rise of complex economic analyses used in antitrust arguments since the late 1990s. By tracking the rate of keywords used in antitrust cases and comparing the frequency of those keywords with appeal rates, Econo.Mine would be able to analyze cases according to their economic complexity and determine which concepts and statistical analyses were particularly difficult for judges. The overall objective of Econo.Mine is to improve the drafting of expert testimonies and judicial education in economics so that judges can make better use of the arguments presented to them when deciding cases.

IP Intensive: A Semester at Industry Canada - Policy-Making in Canada's Legal Epicentre

January 12, 2015 by Jason Hayward

I'm able to catch a small slice of the chaos unfolding below while peering out through the line of windows spanning the 10th floor of the C.D. Howe Building. What began as nothing more than rumblings of a rumour has turned into a full-fledged security lockdown, with the entire city of Ottawa in a frantic and admittedly frightening upheaval. Corporal Nathan Cirillo is a name that won't soon be forgotten, a victim of senseless violence that all too often finds prominence on the front pages of newspapers the world over. Yet returning to my position within the Copyright and Trade-mark Policy Directorate (CTPD) at Industry Canada (IC) a mere 15 hours after leaving to the sight of red lights and yellow tape, I find it both unsettling and strangely comforting to witness work recommence.

IP Intensive Program: A Semester at The Globe and Mail

January 10, 2015 by Faye Alipour

After two years of legal education in the classroom, starting my first semester of 3L by gaining practical experience as part of Osgoode's Intellectual Property Law and Technology Intensive Program was a very welcome experience. Last year, as a member of Osgoode's Harold G. Fox intellectual property moot team, I got a small taste of some practical issues that face IP litigators. This year, the opportunity to complete an intensive placement in the Legal Department of The Globe and Mail provided me with an immersive and practical experience that transformed my understanding of lawyering.

IP Intensive Program: A Semester at Canadian Heritage - An Insider's Look into the Copyright Policy Shop

January 10, 2015 by Mona Zarifian

Until mid-September of 2014, my perspective on legal policy was essentially limited to my experiences writing the policy section embedded in my law school and graduate school essays. This past fall when I was fortunate enough to be enrolled in Osgoode's Intellectual Property Law and Technology Intensive Program and spend a semester at the Department of Canadian Heritage - Copyright and International Trade Branch, where I witnessed what legal policy-making looks like through a practical standpoint.

IP Intensive Program: A Semester at ventureLAB

January 10, 2015 by Anya Lavrov

In Fall of 2014, I had the privilege of participating in Osgoode's Intellectual Property Law and Technology Intensive Program. I was placed at ventureLAB, a non-profit Regional Innovation Centre and a member of the Ontario Network of Entrepreneurs, which helps entrepreneurs in York Region, Simcoe County and Muskoka District bring their innovations to market. Its tagline, mentoring – partnering – connecting, succinctly summarizes the support ventureLAB provides to entrepreneurs and other stakeholders in the community such as academic institutions, investors, and governmental agencies. Clients come to ventureLAB from various industry sectors and at different stages of their individual business lifecycle. The organization offers a variety of services, including business workshops and one-on-one mentoring with ventureLAB's Entrepreneurs in Residence (EIRs), a dedicated team of industry experts.
