Lawyer or Librarian? Who Will Answer Your Copyright Question?

September 14, 2015 by Lesley Ellen Harris

The full version of Lesley Ellen Harris' article is available in the upcoming issue of the Intellectual Property Journal (IPJ).

In most organizations, if you have a legal question you head over to the legal department. When someone has a copyright question, however, they often head over to the library or information centre to discuss it with the librarian or information professional responsible for copyright and licensing issues. When did this shift occur, and why?

Will Google's Alphabet Begin with B-M-W?

September 14, 2015 by Jaimie Franks

"A, B, C,...as easy as 1, 2, 3?" That remains to be seen. BMW may be driving Google down a bumpy road named Trademark-Infringement Lane, after Google surprised everyone on August 10th with the creation of a new company, Alphabet. I say this because the trademark "Alphabet" and the domain name alphabet.com are currently owned by German automobile-manufacturer BMW. Following the announcement, BMW reportedly indicated that it is now "necessary to examine the legal trademark implications" of Google's move.

U.S. Automakers Take the Wheel on Cybersecurity – But Can Canadian Manufacturers Hitch a Ride?

September 14, 2015 by Douglas Judson

The re-posting of this article is part of a cross-posting agreement with CyberLex.

This summer, U.S. automakers pledged to ramp up motor vehicle cyber protection measures by launching a new centre for cybersecurity intelligence and analysis. This initiative, dubbed the Auto Information Sharing and Analysis Centre (Auto ISAC, one of a number of industry ISACs that have formed in recent months), is intended to function as a clearinghouse for intelligence regarding cyber threats to cars and their data networks.
