Thinking Outside the (Legal) Box: IP Osgoode's Orphan Works Licensing Portal Hackathon

February 18, 2016 by Sebastian Beck-Watt

Over the course of three days in early February 2016, IP Osgoode played host to the Orphan Works Licencing Portal Hackathon, a multidisciplinary and international event that resulted in a memorable proposal for an "Orphan Hunter." While that may sound more like a discarded Stephen King draft than a solution to an important copyright issue, it is indicative of the creative and innovative thinking that drove the event.

IP Osgoode Speaks Series featuring Jerry Agar: I Don't Care About You

February 24, 2016 by Jordan Fine

Jerry Agar—host of the "Jerry Agar Show" on Newstalk 1010 radio—opened his IP Osgoode Speaks Series talk with an admission that he did not care about us. Following the fleeting moment where he (clearly in jest) cast immediate discouragement onto his own audience, he clarified his statement: the default position for Agar—and media gatekeepers, generally—is a casual disregard for the strangers who regularly seek to leverage media to their benefit.

Embracing failure: IPOsgoode's Orphan Works Hackathon.

February 23, 2016 by Paul Blizzard

Fail early. Fail often. For lawyers and law students, failure is anathema; but, in the context of design, failure is a valuable learning tool. For three days starting February 3rd, innovators, law students, and stakeholders in the creative industries descended on Osgoode for IPOsgoode's second annual hackathon.

IP Osgoode Hackathon: Using Simple Language to Solve a Complicated Problem

February 24, 2016, by Quin Gilbert-Walters

IP Osgoode recently hosted the Orphan Works Hackathon at Osgoode Hall Law School. Typically, a hackathon brings together professionals from a common field, such as computer programming, and assigns them a complex problem to solve. The organizers of the Orphan Works Hackathon used the same premise but invited a broad spectrum of stakeholders of orphan works. The hackathon produced not only a simple solution to a complex problem but also a simplified process for tackling complicated issues.
